

THE ART OF SELF-CARE

Understanding Abhyanga

A gentle guide to the Ayurvedic practice behind your Tuesday & Thursday sessions.

WHAT IS ABHYANGA

A Ritual, Not a Routine

Abhyanga is a traditional Ayurvedic self-massage using warm oil, done slowly and mindfully — to nourish the body, calm the nervous system, and support circulation. It's less a task to check off, and more a moment you give yourself.

"What you do for your body supports what shows up on your face."

WHY IT'S PART OF YOUR WEEK

The Benefits

- Better circulation — warm oil massage increases blood flow, helping deliver nutrients to the skin
- Lymphatic support — encourages drainage, which can reduce puffiness and dullness over time
- A calmer nervous system — lower stress often shows up as less tension in the face and jaw
- Grounding & ritualistic — a quiet moment of self-care, not just another item on your list

YOUR WEEKLY RHYTHM

How It Fits Your Week

Abhyanga is practiced twice a week, alongside your three Face Yoga days — a full-body counterpart to your facial practice.

Tuesday

UPPER BODY

Neck, shoulders, arms and upper back — easing tension and supporting flow toward the face.

Thursday

LOWER BODY

Legs and feet — grounding the nervous system and supporting overall circulation and recovery.

WHAT IT FEELS LIKE

In Practice

- Slow, rhythmic strokes with warm oil — sesame, coconut, or almond, as advised by your teacher
- Done in a quiet space, typically before or after a shower
- Unhurried — even 10–15 minutes of mindful strokes makes a difference

> A note on technique: the exact strokes and pressure are shown to you by your teacher, tailored to your comfort and body. This guide is simply the "why" behind the practice.

A little ritual, every week.

Give yourself these quiet minutes — your body, and your glow, will thank you for it.
